WHO WE ARE

That ambulance across street in the wee small hours of the morning doesn't necessarily mean that your neighbor's ill or been injured. In Las Vegas, Nevada or Phoenix, Arizona it often means that your neighbor's computer is ill.

It could well be PC911, the Southwest's fastest growing green computer repair service, on a rescue mission. PC911 is the Southwest's, and as far as we know, the nation's only mobile technical service for computer and network repair that arrives on the job with veggie fuel driven ambulances. Our services include wireless networking, data transfer, PC repair, PC installation, virus and spyware removal, as well as business telephone systems, to name just a few.

In almost any city in the nation, one can find a geek, working out of his or her garage, who's available to fix your home or business computer system. And therein lies the PC911 story: Chad Stone, Founder and President saw a clear need for a rapid response, computer repair team; one that is highly experienced, not only in the arcane environments of chips, circuits, networking, software and so many other elements of these machines that understand only 1s and 0s, but also a team that was engaging, socially acceptable, if you will: A skilled team of computer geeks who can not only assess and repair home and business systems, generally within a few hours, but can also communicate with clients and understand their needs.

But when you're filling a need for which there are a myriad of options for your potential client base, you've got to do things differently, and Chad Stone did just that when he acquired the first PC911 ambulance.

What better to the rescue of a sick computer system than an ambulance; and one stocked with the most frequently used computer parts, from motherboards, to peripheral cards, to hard drives. Each of PC911's four ambulances today are so stocked.

Each of those ambulances have been converted to run on recycled vegetable oil that PC911 collects from restaurants around the area; stores in its facilities and recycles daily to fill the tanks of its ambulances.

With highly skilled technicians and just about everything necessary to repair or maintain a computer system, PC911 had, and has a considerable leg up on not only on the ubiquitous freelance proprietors who abound in every city, but its “big box” competition.

How is PC911 against that “big box” competition? Well, it’s quite challenging to carry almost every critical spare part for computers as do the PC911 ambulances, around in a Volkswagen and that’s just the beginning. There’s the PC911 rapid response: Chances are, if a client calls us today, we’ll be there today, always within 24 hours (and if it’s a contract business client, we’re always on the spot within a few hours). Moreover, we probably make more house calls daily than our competition. And, though we almost hate to mention it, but our pricing and time to repair (80 percent of all repairs are completed on our clients’ sites; and at worst are returned from our offices within 24 hours) are both significantly less.
